

An individual human existence should be like a river:
small at first, narrowly contained within its banks,
and rushing passionately past rocks and over waterfalls.
Gradually the river grows wider,
the banks recede, the waters flow more quietly, and in the end, without any visible break, they become merged in the sea, and painlessly lose their individual being.

I should wish to die while still at work, knowing that others will carry on what I can no longer do and content in the thought that what was possible has been done.
